

DEVELOPMENT OF SUPERIOR RESPONSIBILITY AT THE ECCC¹

Michala Chadimova

Palacký University, Olomouc, Czech Republic

MichalaChadimova@seznam.cz

CHADIMOVÁ, Michala. Development of superior responsibility at the ECCC. International and Comparative Law Review, 2018, vol. 18, no. 2, pp. 170–184. DOI: 10.2478/iclr-2018-0044.

Summary: This article aims to describe the development process of superior responsibility doctrine at the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia. Superior responsibility is contained in all Statutes of ad hoc tribunals and also the Rome Statute. However, the case of ECCC is distinctive for its special structure and applicable law. As such, the ECCC is being often called ‘hybrid’ court. This Article aims to analyse travaux préparatoires to the ECCC Statute and ECCC Statute itself when it comes to superior responsibility. This analysis will be followed by the ECCC case law. In 2019, the closure of ECCC is anticipated. As such, the first complex analysis on superior responsibility and its applicability by the ECCC is appropriate and can be used as guidance for other already established or future hybrid tribunals. To some extent, the findings can also be used for the application of superior responsibility by the ICC.

Keywords: superior responsibility, ECCC, hybrid tribunal, development, case law

1. Introduction

Superior responsibility is a doctrine of international criminal law addressing the culpability of superiors who fail to prevent or punish the commission of international crimes by subordinates under their command. This doctrine is remarkable in several aspects, but mainly in criminalizing omission opposed ordinary criminal acts involving affirmative commission. The terms “superior” and “command” have sometimes been used interchangeably as labels for a form of responsibility in international criminal law, but have also been employed in different context, particularly to distinguish between a military superior – a commander and a civilian superior.

Superior responsibility, as developed in Statutes of the ad hoc tribunals, hybrid tribunals and Rome Statute, has three basic elements. These basic elements are mostly clarified through the case law. Each element differs through different tribunals; however the core of the elements is the same. The superior may be held criminally responsible for the acts of his subordinates whether the following three conditions are met. Firstly, the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship between a superior and a subordinate (the alleged principal offenders) has to be proven. Secondly, there is the mens rea requirement – the knowledge of the accused that the crime was about to be, was being, or had been committed. Lastly, the omission on the part of the superior has to be proven – a failure of the superior to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent or stop the crime, or to punish the perpetrator.²

1 This Article is created within the project IGA_PF_2017_016, Tranziční spravedlnost – stíhání a trestání zločinů minulosti supported by the Palacký University, Olomouc.

The doctrine of superior responsibility has gained widespread recognition since its application in the Yamashita trial. To deal with the atrocities in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council in 1993 created the ad hoc International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia tribunal. Article 7 of the ICTY Statute deals explicitly with superior responsibility.³ The second ad hoc international criminal tribunal was established in 1994 for punishing crimes committed in Rwanda and its Statute also explicitly mentions superior responsibility.⁴ The wording for superior responsibility is identical in both statutes. After long process of negotiation, the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia (ECCC) were established in order to deal with crimes that occurred during Democratic Kampuchea regime in 70's.

This article aims to describe the development process of superior responsibility doctrine under the ECCC. As mentioned above, superior responsibility is contained in all Statutes of ad hoc tribunals and also the Rome Statute. However, the case of ECCC is distinctive for its special structure and applicable law. It is a Cambodian court with international elements. It combines Cambodian and international judges, prosecutors, defence lawyers and applies both Cambodian and international law. Thus, the ECCC is represented by national and interna-

2 Zejnir Delalić, ICTY, IT-96-21-T, 16. 11. 1998, § 346. Findings confirmed in Zejnir Delalić, 20 February 2001, ICTY, IT-96-21-A, 20. 2. 2001, § § 189–198, 225–226, 238–239, 256, 263.

3 'The fact that any of the acts referred to in articles 2 to 5 of the present Statute was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his superior of criminal responsibility if he knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.' UN Security Council, Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (as amended on 17 May 2002), 25 May 1993, [online] [27-07-2018]. Available at: <http://www.refworld.org/docid/3dda28414.html>, Art. 7(3).

4 'The fact that any of the acts referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his or her superior of criminal responsibility if he or she knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.' UN Security Council, Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (as last amended on 13 October 2006), 8 November 1994, [online] [27-07-2018]. Available at: <http://www.refworld.org/docid/3ae6b3952c.html>, Art. 6(3).

tional elements. For this special combination of national and international elements, the ECCC is called 'hybrid', 'internationalized' or 'mixed' court.

Article 1 of the ECCC Statute reads as "The purpose of this law is to bring to trial senior leaders of Democratic Kampuchea and those who were most responsible for the crimes and serious violations of Cambodian penal law, international humanitarian law and custom, and international conventions recognized by Cambodia, that were committed during the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979." (emphasis added by the author). As such, personal jurisdiction of the ECCC is strictly limited to senior leaders of the regime and those who were most responsible. Thus, superior responsibility is logically very often used responsibility at the ECCC cases.

This Article aims to analyze travaux préparatoires preceding the ECCC Statute and ECCC Statute itself when it comes to superior responsibility. This analysis will be followed by the case law and usage of superior responsibility at the ECCC. Up until today, there is no complex analysis of the development of superior responsibility at the ECCC and complex analysis of the its usage in the ECCC case law.

In 2019, the closure of ECCC is anticipated. As such, the complex analysis on superior responsibility and its applicability by the ECCC is welcomed and can be used as a guidance for other already established or future hybrid tribunals. To some extent, the findings can also be used for the application of superior responsibility by the ICC.

2. Travaux Préparatoires

The Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia (ECCC) were established in order to bring to trial senior leaders and those most responsible for crimes committed under the Khmer Rouge regime. The ECCC started operating in 2006, following an agreement in 2003 between the Kingdom of Cambodia and the UN. This hybrid judicial organ, with strictly limited time jurisdiction, provides a unique approach to accountability for the mass atrocities committed between 17 April 1975 and 7 January 1979 in Cambodia.⁵

The negotiations between the UN and Cambodia to set up a special tribunal took a long time. The negotiations started approximately in 1997 and resulted in two key documents: The Law on the Establishment of the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia for the Prosecution of Crimes Committed during the Period of Democratic Kampuchea (ECCC Statute) and the UN/

5 MEISENBERG, Simon. STEGMILLER Ignaz. Introduction: An Extraordinary Court. In: MEISENBERG, Simon, STEGMILLER Ignaz (eds). The Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia Assessing their Contribution to International Criminal Law. The Hague: T.M.C. Asser Press, 2016, pp. 1–2.

Cambodia Agreement.⁶ A historical analysis of negotiation and documents prior finalizing the ECCC Statute is necessary in order to understand statutory development of superior responsibility doctrine.

In 1996, the Special Representative of the UN Secretary General for the Human Rights in Cambodia Thomas Hammarberg, opened up the question of the impunity of the Khmer Rouge leaders for crimes committed during the Khmer Rouge regime.⁷ He brought up the issue to the UN Commission on Human Rights session in April 1997. The Commission on Human Rights Report included the “request the Secretary General [...] to examine any request by Cambodia for assistance in responding to past serious violations of Cambodian and international law [...]”⁸

In June 1997, a letter from two Co-Prime Ministers (Hun Sen and Norodom Ranariddh) was sent to the Secretary-General asking for the UN assistance and the international community in bringing to justice those responsible for the crimes committed from 1975 to 1979.⁹ This letter and its wording („similar efforts to respond to the genocide in Rwanda as was done in the Yugoslavia”) was later used as prove that the Co-Prime Ministers had initially requested an international tribunal. However, Hun Sen later rejected such a proposition.¹⁰

In 1997, the UN Third Committee discussed the crimes committed during the Democratic Kampuchea Regime. The following paragraph was included in the 1997 Report of the Third Committee: “[...] Requests the Secretary-General to examine the request by the Cambodian authorities for assistance in responding to past serious violations of Cambodian and international law, including the possibility of the appointment, by the Secretary-General, of a group of experts

6 Agreement between the United Nations and the Royal Government of Cambodia Concerning the Prosecution under Cambodian Law of Crimes Committed during the Period of Democratic Kampuchea was signed by Deputy Prime Minister Sok An and United Nations Under-Secretary-General Hans Corell in Phnom Penh.

HEDER, Steve. A review of the Negotiations Leading to the Establishment of the Personal Jurisdiction of the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia. London/Paris, 2011, p. 2.

7 HAMMARBERG, Thomas. Efforts to Established a Tribunal Against the Khmer Rouge Leaders: Discussion Between the Cambodian Government and the UN, May 2001. Cited in BASSIOUNI, M. Cherif. Introduction to International Criminal Law. New York: Transnational Publisher, 2003, p. 549.

8 Economic and Social Council, Commission on human rights report on the fifty-third session (10 March-18 April 1997), Doc. E/1997/23 E/CN.4/1997/150, 10. 3. – 18. 4. 1997. p. 27.

9 UN General Assembly, Letter dated 21 June 1997 from the First and Second Prime Ministers of Cambodia addressed to the Secretary-General. Doc. A/51/930 S/1997/488 Annex, 24 June 1997.

UN General Assembly, Report of the Group of Experts for Cambodia Established Pursuant to General Assembly Resolution 52/135. Doc. A/53/850 S/1999/231 Annex, 16. 3. 1999, §§ 80–83 to evaluate the existing evidence and propose further measures, as a means of bringing about national reconciliation, strengthening democracy and addressing the issue of individual accountability.”¹¹ This Report was subsequently adopted by the General Assembly on 27 February 1998. Thus, finally after 19 years from overthrow of the Khmer Rouge, the General Assembly acknowledged that massive human rights violations that had occurred in Cambodia during period between 1975–1979.

10 FAWTHROP, Tom. JARVIS, Helen. Getting away with genocide. London: Pluto Press, 2004, pp. 117–118.

In 1998, Kofi Annan appointed a Group of Experts to investigate the possibility of setting up a special tribunal.¹² After nine months of work, the Group of Experts for Cambodia issued a report detailing, among other issues, extent of individual responsibility.¹³ In the Report, the issue of superior responsibility was discussed within the scope of personal jurisdiction.¹⁴ The Report emphasized that “international law has long recognized that persons are responsible for acts even if they did not directly commit them.”¹⁵ Paragraph 81 of the Report states that responsibility should apply not only to military commanders and civilian leaders who ordered atrocities, but also to those who “knew or should have known that atrocities were being committed or about to be committed by their subordinates and failed to prevent, stop or punish them.”¹⁶ The wording contains both the terms ‘military commander’ and ‘civilian leaders’. Firstly, it seems that these terms were used as synonyms. Secondly, the suggested requirement for mens rea is ‘knew or should have known’ which is a requirement established for military commanders under the Rome Statute.¹⁷ Nevertheless, in the final text of the ECCC Statute, a different level of mens rea ‘knew or had reason to know’ was introduced.

R. Zacklin, the Assistant Secretary-General for legal affairs, in his note to the Secretary-General Kofi Annan suggested that the personal jurisdiction of the tribunal should be defined to reach the major political and military leaders of the Khmer Rouge, as their responsibility for the crimes committed flows from their position as leaders and the principle of command responsibility.¹⁸ This note, together with the Report, shows the intention to apply the superior responsibility towards non-military superiors as well as military commanders. On the other hand, there is absolutely no evidence that superior responsibility

11 UN General Assembly, The report of the Third Committee, Add. 2 on the Situation of Human Rights in Cambodia. Doc. A/52/644/Add.2, 27. 2. 1998.

12 Ibid.

13 UN General Assembly, Report of the Group of Experts for Cambodia Established Pursuant to General Assembly Resolution 52/135. Doc. A/53/850 S/1999/231 Annex, 16. 3. 1999, §§ 80–83. Hereinafter referred to as UN General Assembly Report.

14 UN General Assembly Report, Article 81.

15 Ibid., Article 80.

16 Ibid., Article 81.

17 Ibid.

18 ZACKLIN, Ralph. Note to the Secretary-General: A mixed Tribunal for Cambodia, 18. 7. 1999. Cited in HEDER, S.: supra, p. 27.

should not be applied towards civilian leaders. Nevertheless, the question arose whether the application of superior responsibility to civilian superiors (leaders of Democratic Kampuchea) meets the standard of nullum crimen sine lege. This question was subjected to the decision of the Court as the nullum crimen sine lege challenge was raised in Case 002.¹⁹ This standard ensures that individuals can be held responsible only for acts that were criminal at the time of their commission. The concept of superior responsibility was a relatively new type of responsibility during the Khmer Rouge period with no settled case law apart from the after WW2 judgements from Nuremberg. Thus it was argued that superior responsibility in 70's applied only to military commanders, not civilian superiors. The ECCC had to deal with this challenge in the very first case – Case 001 – as the accused possessed only civilian leadership.²⁰

In 2001, the Cambodian National Assembly unanimously approved a draft of the ECCC Statute. The ECCC Statute had been approved by the Senate and the Constitutional Council and signed by King Norodom Sihanouk. In 2003, following more negotiations between Cambodia and the UN, the UN/Cambodia Agreement was signed by both parties. In 2004, an amendment of the ECCC Law was codified, ensuring that the ECCC Statute and the UN/Cambodia Agreement were consistent.²¹

3. ECCC Statute

Superior responsibility clause is embodied in Article 29 of The Law on the Establishment of the Extraordinary Chambers, commonly referred as the ECCC Statute. Article 29 of the ECCC Statute contains following provision: “[...]The fact that any of the acts referred to in Articles 3 new, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 of this law were committed by a subordinate does not relieve the superior of personal criminal responsibility if the superior had effective command and control or authority and control over the subordinate, and the superior knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators.[...]”²² Unlike the ad hoc tribunals, a requirement of effective command and control was encompassed directly in the text of the Statute. This condition is the only substantive change from the ICTY's and the ICTR's formulations. Otherwise, the wording of Article 29 of the ECC

19 Ieng Sary, ECCC, 002/11-9-09-2007-ECCC/OCIJ(PTC 75), D427/1/6, 25. 10. 2010, §§ 103–135. Hereinafter referred to as Ieng Sary Appeal.

20 Kaing Guek Eav alias Duch, ECCC, 001/18-07-2007-ECCC/TC, E188, 26. 7. 2010, § 549. Hereinafter referred to as Duch.

21 Bassiouni, Ch.: supra, 2003, pp. 550–552.

22 Law on the Establishment of the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia for the Prosecution of Crimes Committed During the Period of Democratic Kampuchea, 2001, as amended by NS/RKM/1004/006 (Oct. 27, 2004), Article 29. Hereinafter referred to as the ECCC Statute.

Statute is identical to the corresponding provisions of superior responsibility in the Statutes of the ICTY and the ICTR. This different approach is explained by consistent jurisprudence on the effective control requirement made by the ad hoc tribunals over the past years.²³ Regrettably, the Statute does not comprise clarification on applicability of superior responsibility to non-military superiors.

Regarding the mens rea requirement, the ECCC Statute follows the practice of the ad hoc tribunals. Article 29 of the ECCC Statute establishes responsibility for superiors who knew or had reason to know that a subordinate was about to commit a crime or had done so. The wording thus differs from wording of the Rome Statute, which requires a higher standard of mens rea. Also, the ECCC Statute does not distinguish a mens rea for military commanders and non-military superiors as this approach was introduced in the Rome Statute.

The wording of the ECCC Statute indicates that the drafters intended to use the interpretation of the doctrine provided by the ad hoc tribunals, mainly the ICTY and the ICTR, and their recent jurisprudence development.²⁴ As a result, the ECCC Statute embodies three elements articulated in the ICTY's and ICTR's jurisprudence to find superiors responsible through superior responsibility – superior/subordinate relation, defined by effective control, mens rea and actus reus in the form of a superior's omission to act (to prevent or to punish).

4. Case Law

The ECCC law provides no applicable law, nor a hierarchy of law designed to offer any guidance on how to avoid conflicting interpretations. The applicability of the customary international law has been challenged in Ieng Sary's case. It was argued that the customary international law cannot be directly applicable because the ECCC is a domestic court and the customary international law is not directly applicable in domestic Cambodians courts.²⁵ The Office of the Co-Investigative Judges decided that the application of customary international law at the ECCC is a corollary from the finding that the ECCC contains characteristics of an international court applying international law.²⁶

The ECCC has limited personal jurisdiction. Article 1 of the ECCC Statute says that only the “most responsible for the crimes and serious violations of Cambodian penal law, international humanitarian law and custom, and international conventions recognized by Cambodia” can be prosecuted by the ECCC.²⁷

²³ Ibid.

²⁴ REHAN, Abeyratne. Superior Responsibility and the Principle of Legality at the ECCC. The George Washington International Review. 2012, vol. 44, p. 48.

²⁵ Ieng Sary, ECCC, 002/19-09-2007/ECCC/OCIJ, D388, 22. 7. 2010, §§ 2–29.

²⁶ Ieng Sary, ECCC, 002/19-09-2007/ECCC/OCIJ (PTC35), D97/13, 8. 12. 2009, § 21.

²⁷ ECCC Statute, Article 1.

The ECCC has also limited temporal jurisdiction as it can only hear cases in which the alleged crimes occurred between the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979.²⁸ Thus, it means that alleged perpetrators can only be held responsible for crimes that were both committed and legally recognizable in this period. The main question arises whether superior responsibility, as set up in 1975, was part of the customary law during 1975–1979. The second question is whether the customary international law during 1975–1979 recognized the responsibility of civilian leaders. Nowadays, superior responsibility is well-established under customary international law, but in 1975 it was a relatively new doctrine under international law. The jurisprudence of the ECCC provided an overview on whether, and to what extent, superior responsibility was part of customary international law. Given to the limited personal jurisdiction of the ECCC applying to senior leaders and those most responsible only, the doctrine of superior responsibility is playing the important part in the prosecution's case.

4.1 Case Kaing Guek Eav

On 26 July 2010, the first judgement of the ECCC was rendered. Kaing Guek Eav, also known as 'Duch', was convicted for crimes against humanity and grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. He was sentenced by the TCH to 35 years imprisonment. This sentence was changed to life imprisonment by the Supreme Court Chamber (SCC). The SCC granted the Co-Prosecutor's appeal, stating that the TCH had erred in the law by attaching insufficient weight to the gravity of Duch's crimes, aggravating circumstances, and that too much weight had been attached to mitigating circumstances.

Duch was the former Chairman of the Khmer Rouge S-21 Security Centre in Phnom Penh. As the chairman of the S-21 security centre, the biggest security centre in Cambodia during the Khmer Rouge period, he was in charge of interrogating perceived opponents of the Communist Party of Kampuchea from 1975 to 1979.²⁹ As the head of the interrogation unit, Dutch supervised interrogations and taught interrogation methods to the staff of the interrogation unit. Consistent evidence showed that Dutch permitted the use of torture during interrogations.³⁰ Following the completion of an interrogation, most of the time detainees were taken away and "smashed" in the Choeung Ek killing field.³¹

The TCH found Duch guilty on the basis of direct participation in crimes. Nevertheless, the TCH also dealt with superior responsibility. It was concluded that Duch cannot be convicted pursuant to a direct form of responsibility and

²⁸ Ibid.

²⁹ Duch, § 125–130.

³⁰ Duch, § 127.

³¹ Ibid., §§ 127–148. During the Khmer Rouge regime, the code name 'kam kam' was used, which could be translated as smash (i.e. executed).

superior responsibility at the same time. Instead, the TCH considered his superior position as an aggravating factor in sentencing.³²

The TCH provided an analysis of the conditions for establishing superior responsibility. It was concluded that all conditions establishing the superior responsibility of Duch for crimes committed by his subordinates were fulfilled. Duch exercised effective control over the S-21 staff, he knew that his subordinates were committing crimes, and failed to take necessary or reasonable measures to prevent their actions or to punish perpetrators.³³ He was found criminally responsible without distinguishing between civilian and military superior responsibility. The TCH accepted superior responsibility for civilian leaders as a part of customary international law during 1975–1979. The main argument supporting this conclusion was made using post WW2 tribunals' jurisprudence and jurisprudence of ad hoc tribunals. In the view of the TCH in the Duch case, this jurisprudence indicates that during the period of 1975 to 1979, superior responsibility under customary international law was not confined to military commanders.³⁴ The TCH argued that the deciding distinction is the degree of control exercised over subordinates rather than the nature of his or her function.³⁵ Furthermore, the TCH held that superior responsibility may be based on both direct and indirect relationships of subordination, as long as effective control over can be proven.³⁶ The TCH ascertained that the principle of legality required forms of responsibility to be "sufficiently foreseeable and that the law providing for such liability was sufficiently accessible to the accused at the relevant time."³⁷ In this case, the TCH concluded that the forms of responsibility were sufficiently foreseeable and accessible to the accused.³⁸ Surprisingly, the defence did not challenge the application of superior responsibility to non-military superiors, thus the doctrine was not subjected to the appeal judgement in Case 001.³⁹

Concerning the application of successor superior responsibility, this issue hasn't been yet raised before the ECCC. However, it might never be raised, as the prosecution in the Duch case decided to follow the majority in the Hadžihasanović/Kubura Decision. The Co-Prosecutors in the Final Trial Submission stated that "[A]n accused may possess either permanent or temporary 32 Ibid, § 539. This conclusion is in conformity with findings in the Blaškić case. Blaškić, § 337 and Blaškić, ICTY, IT-95-14-A, ACH, 29. 7. 2004, §§ 91–92.

33 Ibid, § 549.

34 Ibid, §§ 477–478.

35 Ibid, § 477.

36 Ibid, § 542.

37 Ibid, § 28 (quoting Milutinović et al., ICTY, IT-05-87, ACH, Decision on Dragoljub Ojdanic's Motion Challenging Jurisdiction – Joint Criminal Enterprise, 21. 5. 2003, § 38)

38 Ibid, § 474–476.

39 The Ieng Thirith Defence mentions the omission of raising this issue in Case 001. Ieng Thirith, ECCC, 002/19-09-2007-ECCC/OCIJ(PTCH145), D/427/2/1, 18. 10. 2010, § 83. Hereinafter referred to as Ieng Thirith Defence Appeal.

‘effective control’ over the perpetrator(s), but this must have existed at the time of the commission of the crime(s).⁴⁰

4.2 Case Nuon Chea, Khieu Samphan

Originally, four former Democratic Kampuchea leaders were part of Case 002. The Trial Chamber held the initial hearing in June 2011. Since then, Case 002 has been severed into separate trials (Case 002/01 and Case 002/02), each addressing a different section of the indictment. The proceedings against Ieng Sary were terminated on 14 March 2013, following his death. Ieng Thirith was indicted but later found unfit to stand trial due to her dementia and was separated from the case in November 2011. Nuon Chea, former Chairman of the Democratic Kampuchea National Assembly and Deputy Secretary of the Communist Party of Kampuchea, and Khieu Samphan, former Head of State of Democratic Kampuchea, are currently on trial in Case 002/02.

In 2010, Ieng Sary, Ieng Thirith and Nuon Chea appealed against the Co-Investigating Judges (OCIJ) closing order involving superior responsibility as one of the forms of responsibility. In the closing order, the OCIJ held that superior responsibility existed in customary international law in 1975–1979⁴¹ and that the “criminal responsibility of the superior applies at both military and to civilian superiors.”⁴² The nullum crimen sine lege challenge was made by using the argument that customary international law could not be applied as part of Cambodian law in 1975–1979.⁴³ Alternatively, the Defence argued that from 1975 to 1979 customary international law did not recognize superior responsibility as a basis of responsibility.⁴⁴ Nuon Chea Appeal’s also specified that the modes of liability should be applied only in exclusive reference to modes of liability as recognized in the 1956 Penal Code.⁴⁵ Ieng Thirith in its Appeal, also submitted that superior responsibility between 1975 and 1979 could be prosecuted only in relation to war crimes, as in 1975–1979 there was no rule of customary international law allowing for the prosecution of superior responsibility for crimes against humanity.⁴⁶ Ieng Thirith also argued that the OCIJ failed established the existence of duty to act and its basis in domestic law.⁴⁷

40 Kaing Guek Eav alias Duch, ECCC, 001/18-07-2007-ECCC/TC, E159/9, 11. 11. 2009, § 349.

41 Nuon Chea, Khieu Samphan, Ieng Thirith, Ieng Sary, ECCC, 002/19-09-2007/ECCC/OCIJ, D427, 15. 9. 2010, § § 1307. Hereinafter referred to as Nuon Chea, Closing Order.

42 Nuon Chea, Closing Order, § 1558.

43 Ieng Sary Appeal, §§ 111–114.

44 Ieng Sary Appeal, §§ 283–302. Nuon Chea, Khieu Samphan, Ieng Thirith, Ieng Sary, ECCC, 002/19-09-2007/ECCC/OCIJ, Ieng Thirith Defence Appeal, § § 84–89.

45 Nuon Chea, ECCC, 002/19-09-2007-ECCC/OCIJ(PTCH146), D427/3/1, 18. 10. 2010, § § 26 and 38. Hereinafter referred to as Nuon Chea Appeal. All points were raised again in Nuon Chea, ECCC, 002/19-09-2007-ECCC/OCIJ(PTCH146), D427/3/11, 6. 12. 2010.

46 Ieng Thirith Appeal, §§ 90–92.

47 Ibid, § 93.

In Ieng Sary's Appeal, the application of superior responsibility to internal armed conflict was raised.⁴⁸ Only in Ieng Sary's Appeal the applicability to non-military superiors was raised, arguing that superior responsibility may only be applied to military commanders.⁴⁹ It was argued that superior responsibility may only be applied when causal link is proved between the superior's actions and the crimes of his subordinates as well as pre-existing legal duty to prevent and punish of the superior.⁵⁰ Another point raised in the Appeal was the applicability of superior responsibility to special intent crimes such as genocide.⁵¹ It was argued that superior responsibility is inconsistent with specific intent crimes.⁵² Analysis of the above mentioned challenges is crucial in understanding the concept of superior responsibility at the ECCC.

The PTCH, in a reaction to the Defence Appeals, ruled that in order to fall within the subject matter jurisdiction of the ECCC, modes of liability must "be provided for in the [ECCC law], explicitly or implicitly", and have been "recognized under Cambodian or international law between 17 April 1975 and 6 January 1979."⁵³ Subsequently, the PTCH explicitly ruled that superior responsibility was part of customary law in the period of 1975–1979.⁵⁴ Ieng Thirith's Appeal only challenged the customary international law basis for superior responsibility as a general matter and not whether it also applied to civilian superiors. As such, the PTCH interpreted the Ieng Thirith Appeal to challenge the existence of superior responsibility generally in customary law at the relevant time and not whether it also extended to civilian superiors.⁵⁵ According to the PTCH, the Yamashita case "serves as precedent" for the notion that a superior may be held criminally responsible under international law with respect to crimes committed by subordinates.⁵⁶ Furthermore, the PTCH upheld this conclusion by subsequent case law.⁵⁷ The PTCH concluded that an overview of judgments and decisions taken by different tribunals support the view that the doctrine also applied

48 Ieng Sary Appeal, §§ 307–313.

49 Ibid, §§ 314–315.

50 Ibid, §§ 316–322.

51 Ibid, §§ 323–324.

52 Ibid. The Defence referred to Schabas who explains that "[i]n the case of genocide, for example, it is generally recognized that the mental element of the crime is one of specific intent. It is logically impossible to convict a person who is merely negligent of a crime of specific intent." However, for this conclusion we would have to agree that the superior responsibility is a notion of negligence.

53 Nuon Chea, Khieu Samphan, Ieng Thirith, Ieng Sary, ECCC, 002/19-09-2007/ECCC/OCIJ (PTC 145 and 146), D427/2/15, PTCH, 15. 2. 2011, §§ 87–107. Hereinafter referred to as Nuon Chea and Ieng Thirith Decision.

54 Nuon Chea, Khieu Samphan, Ieng Thirith, Ieng Sary, ECCC, 002/19-09-2007/ECCC/OCIJ (PTC75), D427/1/30, PTCH, 13. 1. 2011, § 460. Hereinafter referred to as Ieng Sary Decision.

55 Nuon Chea and Ieng Thirith Decision, §§ 87–107.

56 Ibid, § 199.

57 Ibid, §§ 188, 200–224.

to non-military superiors.⁵⁸ Regarding the applicability of superior responsibility for crimes against humanity, the PTCH concluded that the applicability base is provided by the customary international law. The PTCH used reference to the High Command case, the Hostage case, the Medical case and the Ministries case where the accused were held responsible under the superior responsibility doctrine not only with respect to war crimes, but also crimes against humanity.⁵⁹ In the Ieng Sary Appeal case, the PTCH came to the conclusion that the AP I adopted in 1977 (Articles 86 and 87), was only a declaration of the existing position and that jurisprudence from the Nuremberg-era tribunals clearly indicates that superior responsibility was not confined to military commanders during the 1975–1979 period. The same conclusion, regarding applicability to civilian superiors, was reached by the Trial Chamber in 002/01. It held that superior responsibility, applicable to both military and civilian superiors, was recognized in customary international law by 1975 and that inconsistency between two cases in a single state (inconsistency in the mens rea requirement in the Yamashita and Medina), without more, does not demonstrate that superior responsibility as a form of responsibility is not customary international law.⁶⁰ Unfortunately, the PTCH did not address the applicability of the doctrine to specific crimes such as genocide.⁶¹

The Trial Chamber convicted both Nuon Chea and Khieu Samphan on the basis of their participation in the JCE. Additionally, in relation to Nuon Chea, the TCH concluded that he (a) ordered the crimes and (b) exercised effective control over the Khmer Rouge cadres in such a way that he was responsible on the basis of superior responsibility. Nevertheless, the TCH found that it could only consider his superior position in the context of sentencing. In contrast to Nuon Chea, the Trial Chamber did not find that Khieu Samphan (as a member of various bodies within the CPK and the Democratic Kampuchea) had sufficient authority to exercise effective control over the perpetrators of the crimes. The TCH of Case 002/01 therefore distinguished between the responsibility of Nuon Chea and Khieu Samphan.⁶² The TCH concluded that Nuon Chea exercised effective control over those members of the CPK and the military members who committed the crimes.⁶³ The TCH concluded that although Khieu Samphan was commander-in-chief of the armed forces, the evidence did not demonstrate that he had effective control over direct perpetrators.⁶⁴

58 Ibid, § 230.

59 Ibid, § 231.

60 Nuon Chea, Khieu Samphan, ECCC, 002/19-09-2007/ECCC/TC, E313, 7. 8. 2014, § 719.

61 Ieng Sary decision, §§ 418. It was held by the PTCH that this challenge by Defence is “mixed issues of fact and law and such issues of the contours of modes of liability, as opposed to their very existence, do not represent jurisdictional challenges.” Ieng Sary decision, §§ 102.

62 Nuon Chea, Khieu Samphan, § § 1079–1080.

63 Ibid, §§ 933–934, 1079.

64 Ibid, §§ 1017–1022

On 23 November 2016, the appeal judgement in the Case 002/01 was rendered. However, given the limited scope of review, the SCC did not bring any new light to the application of the superior responsibility doctrine at the ECCC.⁶⁵

5. Conclusion

The path to justice and punishment of those responsible for war crimes and crimes against humanity committed during the Khmer Rouge regime was long and complicated. The negotiation between the UN and Cambodia to set up a special tribunal took started in 1997. However, it took another 10 years for the special hybrid judicial organ, with strictly limited time jurisdiction providing a unique approach to accountability for mass atrocities committed between 17 April 1975 and 7 January 1979, to be set up and start to operate.

The General Assembly acknowledged the massive human rights violations that had occurred in Cambodia in 1998. At the same year, a Group of Experts to investigate the possibility of setting up a special tribunal was appointed. Their work resulted in the Report which could be used as the basis for the superior responsibility development at the Cambodian Tribunal. The Report was surprisingly detailed when it comes to the personal jurisdiction and superior responsibility. In this Report, the distinction between military and civilian leaders was made and the higher level of mens rea “should have known” was recommended. This Report, with a note from Zacklin, served as an interpretational base for the ECCC Statute which was unanimously passed by the Cambodian Senate 2001. Regrettably, Article 29 of the ECCC does not include clarification on the applicability of superior responsibility to non-military commanders, a point which became hotly debated in the case-law of the ECCC.

The existing jurisprudence of the ECCC provided thus far an overview on whether superior responsibility was part of customary international law and to what extent. The ECCC case law on superior was formed by different judicial organs of the ECCC, not only by the Chambers but also by Co-investigative Judges, in different stages of the proceedings. In the Duch case and also Case 002 (Nuon Chea, Khieu Samphan), it was confirmed that superior responsibility formed part of customary international law in the 1970's. Moreover, it was confirmed that the doctrine of superior responsibility related not only to military commanders but also to non-military superiors. This conclusion was mainly based on the analysis of post-Second World War Tribunals' judgments. Some critiques appeared to the extent that the argumentation should be based on the interpretation of the AP I to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 (1977), which probably more clearly defines superior responsibility and reflects a broad consensus on the state of international law in the 1970s.⁶⁶

65 Nuon Chea, Khieu Samphan, ECCC, 002/19-09-2007/ECCC/SC, F36, 23. 10. 2016, §§ 1096–1101.

66 REHAN, A.: supra, pp. 75–76.

The analysis of Case 001 and Case 002 was provided in this Article. The investigation in Case 003 was concluded.⁶⁷ However, no materials have been made public yet. As such, we can only assume, based on the facts of the case, that superior responsibility was probably discussed in the International Co-Prosecutor's Final Submission. Case 004/01 has been dismissed due to the Co-Investigating Judges' Closing Order arguing a lack of personal jurisdiction regarding the criminal allegations against IM Chaem. This decision has been subjected to the appeal. Three judges have concluded a lack of personal jurisdiction over IM Chaem. Two other judges have found that the evidence brought sufficient charges to consider that IM Chaem was among those most responsible and that the ECCC have jurisdiction over her. As four out of five votes are required to overturn a Co-Investigating judges' decision, the decision affirming that the ECCC have no jurisdiction over IM Chaem shall stand. This decision eventually concludes Case 004/01. The investigation in Case 004/02 continues.⁶⁸ Even though the closure of the Tribunal is anticipated in 2019, superior responsibility, as one of the forms of responsibility, may still become a role in the future proceedings. Some problematic aspects of superior responsibility haven't been properly raised and discussed yet, such as the successor superior responsibility doctrine or superior responsibility for special intended crimes, such as genocide.

Based on the interpretation of the case-law, it can be concluded that the superior responsibility formed part of customary international law in 1970's and that the doctrine of superior responsibility related not only to military commanders but also to non-military superiors at that time. This Article offers unique inside into the development of superior responsibility at the ECCC and its applicability in the ECC case law. As such, it might serve as guidance for future proceedings concerning responsibility of superiors or commanders for failing to prevent or punish the acts committed by their subordinates in the context of international criminal tribunals or hybrid tribunals.

References

- BASSIOUNI, M. Cherif. Introduction to International Criminal Law. New York: Transnational Publisher, 2003.
- FAWTHROP, Tom. JARVIS, Helen. Getting away with genocide. London: Pluto Press, 2004.
- 67 On 14 November 2017 the Co-Prosecutors filed their Final Submissions in Case 003, concerning the investigation of Meas Muth. [online] [27-05-2018]. Available at: <https://www.eccc.gov.kh>
- 68 On 22 February 2017, the Co-Investigating Judges dismissed the case against Im Chaem, finding she was not subject to the personal jurisdiction of the ECCC which means she was neither a senior leader nor otherwise one of the most responsible officials of the Khmer Rouge regime. On 20 July 2017, the International Co-Prosecutor filed the notice of Appeal against the Co-Investigating Judges' closing order to the Pre-Trial Chamber. On 11 and 12 December 2017, the Pre-Trial Chamber held hearings in case 004/1 to hear the arguments of the parties before it issues its decision on the appeal. [online] [27-05-2018]. Available at: <https://www.eccc.gov.kh>

- HAMMARBERG, Thomas. Efforts to Establish a Tribunal Against the Khmer Rouge Leaders: Discussion Between the Cambodian Government and the UN, May 2001.
- HEDER, Steve. A review of the Negotiations Leading to the Establishment of the Personal Jurisdiction of the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia. London/Paris, 2011.
- MEISENBERG, Simon. STEGMILLER Ignaz. Introduction: An Extraordinary Court. In: MEISENBERG, Simon, STEGMILLER Ignaz (eds). The Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia Assessing their Contribution to International Criminal Law. The Hague: T.M.C. Asser Press, 2016.
- REHAN, Abeyratne. Superior Responsibility and the Principle of Legality at the ECCC. The George Washington International Review. 2012, vol. 44.
- ZACKLIN, Ralph. Note to the Secretary-General: A mixed Tribunal for Cambodia, 18. 7. 1999.