Dear readers,

It is our pleasure to bring in a new issue – Volume 11, Issue2, 2015 -- of SEEU Review to professors, professionals, students and other interested readers.

This edition of the SEEU Review is general in conception. Readers of this journal will know that the preceding edition of this Review was dedicated to the 800th anniversary of Magna Carta, and it specifically reprinted essays presented at the South East European University conference to celebrate this document and its ideas. These proceedings are available online as a special edition.

This issue, however, is unspecific in structure. It is open to all forms of scholarly inquiry. It does not focus on papers upon a particular topic, but openly reflects the diversity of academic endeavor. The lack of specific thematic topic is intentional—we seek to publish the best papers from the study areas taught and researched at our university, thus embodying the integrated and diverse nature of South East European University.

The second issue of the 11th volume of SEEU Review, has continued to be anonymously peer-reviewed. This time the peer review team was composed of scholars who span the region. This issue embraces topics related to international relations, demographic studies, inheritance law, clinical law teaching, economic transition processes in Southeast European countries, monetary studies, et al.

It is the hope of the editors and the reviewers that this issue of SEEU Review is a serious contribution to scholarship. The authors have worked hard on this scholarship and research, and we welcome the opportunity to publish it.

Editor-in-chief,

Andrew Goodspeed
