It is the pleasure of the Editorial Board of the SEEU Review to present to you this issue (Volume 13, 2018) of our scholarly journal, the SEEU Review, and to thank you for your interest in reading the papers published here.

The SEEU Review is the primary research journal of South East European University, although our contributors, reviewers, and editorial members come from many nations, institutions, and disciplines. The University itself operates two campuses in the Republic of Macedonia: one in Tetovo and one in Skopje.

Our common commitment to the journal unites us. In the desire to provide high-quality publication opportunities, for no money, to scholars. No contributor is ever asked for any money at any stage of the submission, review, or publication process. All papers submitted are blind reviewed, and reviewers are not compensated for their work; the reviewers thus have no inducement other than scholarly merit to recommend acceptance of a paper for publication. Once published, there is no charge for any reader to access and read the papers published in the SEEU Review. At a time of proliferating academic fraudulence and deception in the worlds of publishing and conferences, the SEEU Review prides itself on an open, transparent, and entirely free-of-charge process for submitters, reviewers, and readers.

For this specific issue, there were a large number of submissions; we thank all contributors for their submissions, whether or not they are published in this journal. In this issue readers will find research papers on multiple and various topics, among which we may note sociolinguistics, civil rights, contemporary political science, and communications. We take pleasure in commending the papers contained herein to your scholarly attention.

As always, the SEEU Review presents these papers in good faith, as a service to scholarship. Ultimately the individual authors are responsible for their research, conclusions, and the integrity of their use of sources.
