Peer Review Process

All scientists interested in the area of agriculture and environmental protection are cordially invited to contribute (Instructions to Authors).

All research articles submitted for this journal are rigorously peer reviewed, based on editor verification for scientific and technical conformities and anonymous refereeing by three anonymous referees.

Each submission first undertake an internal peer review by the editorial board who decides if the manuscript will be send out for peer review or to reject without external review. Articles can be rejected at this stage for similarity with other published article, the inadequate topic, scientific inconsistency or poor experimental results. The accepted manuscript is then sent out for external peer review.

The editors upon consulting the scientific board identify potential reviewers based on their expertise in the field. Three reviewers are selected for each submitted manuscript. After selection, they receive the manuscript without authors name and based on reviewing instructions will provide their independent decision. The name of reviewer remains confidential not being communicated to manuscript authors.

After the reviewing process, authors receive the decision from the editorial board as follows: accepted, accepted with slight changes, revise and resubmit, rejected.
