EDITORIAL POLICY

The Journal of Haemophilia Practice is an international, peer-reviewed journal focusing on the care of people living with bleeding disorders.

All manuscripts submitted to The Journal of Haemophilia Practice will first be subject to a technical review, including a quality check of all the files submitted, including tables, figures and references. This will include a plagiarism check.

Manuscripts will then be reviewed by the Editor-in-Chief, who will decide whether or not to proceed to peer-review by members of our editorial board and invited experts.

The identity of the reviewers will not be disclosed to the authors. The review procedure will result in one of four decisions:

- Accept
- Accept subject to minor revisions
- Accept subject to major revisions
- Reject

The editorial decision will be communicated to the authors as soon as the review process has been finalized. In case of revisions, the revised article will be sent to the reviewers who will decide on a new recommendation for revision, acceptance or rejection. The estimated time from the submission to first decision is approximately 4-6 weeks, and from the final revision to acceptance is approximately 2 weeks. Prior to publication, the corresponding author will receive a proof of their article in order to confirm the accuracy of the text or suggest modifications.
