

Per review process

- All scholarly studies submitted are subject to a review process, which is anonymous on both sides.
- Based on the opinions of reviewers a contribution may be accepted for publication, returned to the author for revision, or rejected.
- In cases of fundamental disagreement among the reviewers in their evaluations, the editorial board reserves the right to make the decision.
- The editors also have the right to make any indispensable formal, stylistic, or grammatical revisions in contributions.
