

Editorial policy

The unique profile of Studies in Logic, Grammar and Rhetoric (SLGR) lies in exploiting three classical fields of medieval trivium in the studies of communication.

The journal was founded in 1980 by Witold Marciszewski – the logician and philosopher whose research is deeply rooted in the tradition of the Lvov-Warsaw School.

The first issue of SLGR appeared in 1980. In Editorial Introduction the bonds among the medieval Logic, Grammar and Rhetoric, as well as among their modern counterparts, were revealed about chances of reviving the venerable tradition.

The opening of a new phase dates at 1997 year when SLGR obtains features of both a journal, appearing annually, and a book series, each volume being a collection concerning a common subject announced by the volume title.

Since 1997 onward SLGR is fully and freely available on-line (logika.uwb.edu.pl/studies/). After nearly ten years we again enter a new period. Its visible sign is the enhanced cover design, while an essential novelty consists in starting a systematic collaboration with the Polish Association for Logic and Philosophy of Science, what is signified with formula under the auspices. This is to mean that Association's representatives join the editorial team and the advisory board. This also means Association's help in gaining wider contacts for international collaboration.

Since 2010 there is issued "Logical, Statistical and Computer Methods in Medicine", which is an interdisciplinary combination of the humanities, the sciences and medicine.

The journal is to be addressed to a much wider circle of foreign recipients that it used to be so far. We hope to obtain responses which should make this journal a significant forum of scholarly collaboration in modern counterparts of Logic, Grammar and Rhetoric.
